LIVE DEAD

CHRISTOPH DRAEGER

LIVE/DEAD

In 1968, my parents reluctantly joined my mother's younger sister, and her husband for a concert at a local catholic church near Zurich, a 1960's concrete building. The singer was Champion Jack Dupree, who, like many american blues and jazz musicians, was touring Europe, where he could make a better living than in the US. There, the audience had long turned towards psychedelic and folk rock, losing interest in the older blues, soul and rock'n roll acts that had dominated the late 1950's.

At the time, I was only three years old, so I am not sure if I genuinely remember anything about that evening. But my parents told me that I was so thrilled with Champion Jack Dupree, that at one point, I slid out of the church bench and speeded towards the low stage where the singer played his piano. He picked me up with a big smile, and let me sit on his knee for the entire song.

Maybe that was the moment when I was first infected with the virus that would stay with me my whole life: american pop music, especially blues, jazz, soul, funk, and rock.

In 1991, I had already built a considerable record collection, wherever I went, I was roaming the record stores, thrift stores and flea markets. It was while I was living in Brussels, when I picked up a "Live" record by Lionel Hampton from 1954 at the marché aux puces. I contemplated the cover thinking that Hampton must be long dead, despite the word "Live" on the cover. (In fact, he was still alive, he would pass in 2002, aged 96). I bought the record and the project was born. The simple paradox of record sleeves claiming "Live" for artists who are dead intrigued me. So from then on, I would buy every record that had the word LIVE and a picture of the artist on the cover, whenever I suspected that its star was dead. Sometimes I was wrong, but by definition, that error is temporary. By 2014, the collection has grown to more than 230 records, and it keeps growing.

I had shown it in various editions in Geneva, San Francisco, New York, Berlin, Warsaw and other cities. I always put a record player at the disposal of the audience, and sometimes I use the records for a DJ performance.

When I got invited for this publication, I found myself in Cape Cod with a two week's deadline, and only my laptop's content at my disposal. Sometimes in the past, I had photographed about one hundred of my "live" records, but the choice here is quite accidental. In the pages on the left side, one can find the complete list of all the artists in my "Live/Dead" collection, chronologically by dates of death, until October 2014.

Naturally, that list will just keep growing in the future.

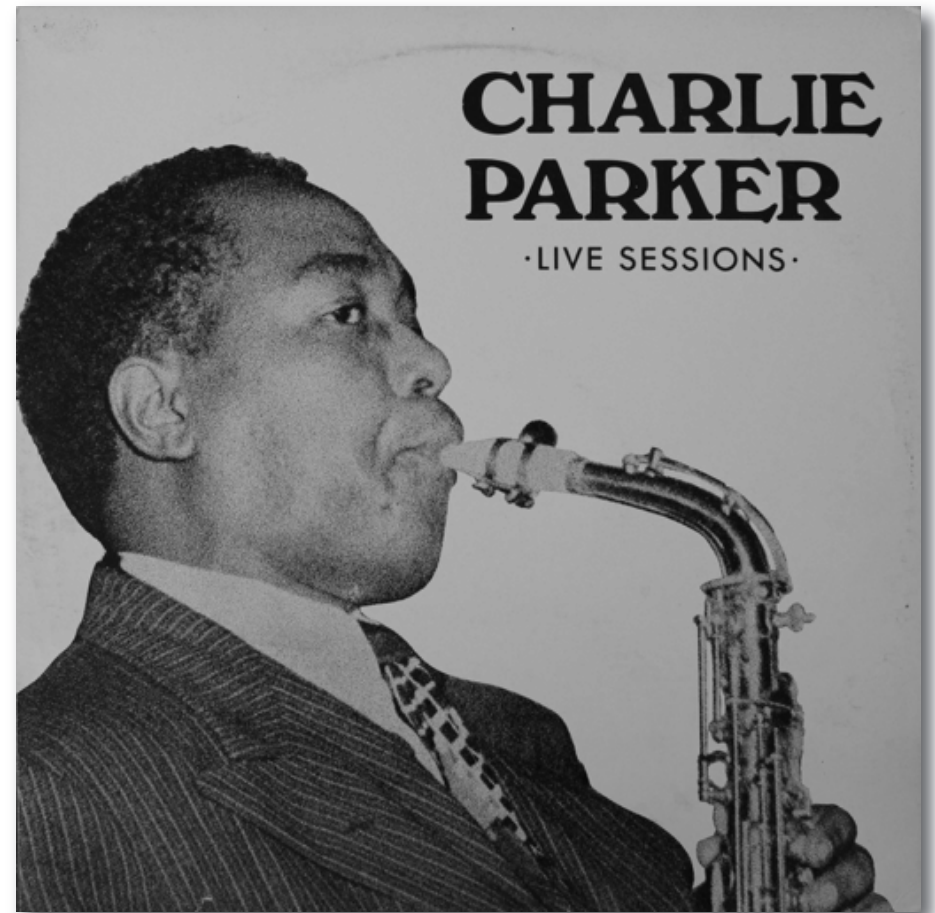

I had the great chance to see some of the musicians featured in this book alive in concert: Frank Zappa, Albert Collins, Luther Allison, Lou Reed and Johnny Winter. I'd really wish they were all still alive.
