MUKADIMAH

Dalam seni cetak ada tiga kaedah kerja yang paling utama. Pertama kaedah tekap, kedua stensil dan ketiga adalah cetak. Kaedah yang tiga ini jika menggunakan matrik atau blok ia akan menerbitkan satu sistem yang ‘regimented’ kaku, tegas dan berulang-ulang. Perkara ini tidak digemari oleh ramai karyawan maka oleh itu peranannya diambil alih oleh rumah penerbitan. Ia satu sistem yang baik untuk industri kerana boleh menyebarkan karya yang serupa dengan banyak juga dengan harga yang berpatutan. Oleh itu karya – karya seniman mampu dimiliki oleh orang ramai. Di Barat dan Jepun budaya ini mendapat sambutan yang baik kerana masyarakat memahami dan mempunyai penghayatan yang matang dan tinggi. Berbanding dengan masyarakat negara kita yang masih menganggap edisi tidak eksklusif dan tidak original. Perkataan ‘cetak’ dilihat amat kabur dan meragukan maknanya.

Faizal Suhif

Karyawan muda ini saya kenali sejak 2006 semasa beliau masih menuntut di Uitm Shah Alam dalam jurusan seni cetak. Saya berkhidmat di tahun tahun akhir sebagai ‘dosen terbang’ di universiti – universiti tempatan selama hampir dua puluh tahun.

Saya sebagai pemerhati, tidak pernah bertanya mengapa karya karya beliau harus begitu atau begini. Saya lebih gemar memerhatikan tingkah dan laku. Bagi saya jelas ‘attitude’ adalah persoalan besar dan utama. Tentang lain hal itu soal kedua, ketiga atau keempat kerana yang lain boleh dilatih dan dipelajari. ‘Attitude’ adalah tulang belakang seniman sejati, bakat hanyalah kurnian Ilahi kepada semua orang yang dilahirkan didunia ini.!Jadi apa ada pada bakat!Kerana setiap orang mempunyainya dan mendapat percuma. Tetapi mengasah bakat dan mengenegahkan bakat perlu ‘dibayar’ bersama kecekalan dan kesungguhan. Faizal membawa peribadinya seperti cawan yang separuh penuh. Mundar mandir dalam rendah diri,tetapi dalam masa yang sama beliau seorang yang mandiri. Itu sebatian orang ingin mencari ilmu!

Faizal membawa peribadinya seperti cawan yang separuh penuh. Mundar mandir dalam rendah diri,tetapi dalam masa yang sama beliau seorang yang mandiri. Itu sebatian orang ingin mencari ilmu!

Alami

Karyawan alami seperti ini bukan satu ‘sandiwaro eco’ yang sering dilaung-laungkan. Ia bukan fesyen alami yang ‘trendy’. Ia alami yang benar, yang bermula dari mana bumi dipijak disitu langit yang dijunjung. Adalah satu kebiasaan jika saya mendapat pesanan dari Faizal berbunyi seperti ini, Encik Jo,saya balik kampung membantu bapa saya menanam anak getah.Ini pengalaman sebatи diri.

Pengkaryaan

Dalam pengkaryaan, beliau memproses pengalaman alami,estetika yang naluri dan yang dipelajari bersama kemahiran teknik.Ini terbukti dalam karyanya yang bertajuk ‘Lebah’. Lebah itu bersaiz kecil tapi sebenarnya ia lebih besar jika dilihat dari struktur organisasi koloni dan sumbangannya pada manusia. Dengan pengolahan teknik tekap dan stensel yang mahir, beliau berjaya memperlihatkan estetika yang tinggi dalam karya tersebut. Bolehkah kita bayangkan bagaimana seekor lebah kecil dilonjakan menjadi karya penting dalam pameran solo seperti ini? Begitu juga dengan karya yang bertajuk ‘Labah-labah’. Ia juga seekor serangga kecil yang kurang dipedulikan tetapi amat tinggi nilai ilmunya jika kita mahu mengkaji dari sudut taktikal dan strategi.Karya ini juga begitu menyerlah sebagai teknik tekapan dan stensel yang begitu baik.

Puisi

Sekuntum bunga kecil nampak begitu besar serinya. Dari putik putik kecil akan terbit pula musim buah yang meriah!Manifestasi ini begitu jelas dalam karya-karya beliau. Mungkin dalam hati kecilnya beliau kagum melihat segala-galanya yang bermula dari sebesar zarah sehingga lah kita manusia menikmati akan kemeriahannya. Dalam dua buah karyanya yang bertajuk ‘growth’ keadaan ini bertambah peribadi. Karya karya ini begitu ‘ketimuran’ la seperti sebuah catan tenang. Tampak gangguan. Apakah berkarya itu sudah seperti sebuah ritual peribadi? Atau melukis puisi yang bukan untuk didengari tapi untuk dihayati dan diamati..

INTRODUCTION

There are three major techniques applied in printmaking: tracing, stencilling and printing. When the three methods are deployed on a matrix or block, the outcome will be a rigid, regimented system that can be duplicated over-and-over again.

The duplicative nature of print production is something that does not sit well with many visual artists, for it is perceived that the artist has given away the final output, placing it instead in the hands of the publisher. Art purveyors and industry, however, embrace such a duplicative production system for it allows for works of art to be widely distributed and certainly—sold at more affordable prices. Thus, more members of the public can now own a piece of the artist's work.

For those from the more artistically mature societies of the West and in some Asian countries like Japan, this type of art production and consumption is well accepted. Here, however, the situation is a little bit different. Many are still apprehensive towards the idea of editions; whereby prints are deemed as 'unexclusive' and not 'original'. The meaning of the word 'print' (at least in some art circles) is thus obfuscated and perceived pejoratively.

Faizal Sufi

I have known the artist since 2006. Back then, he was still a fine art student at UiTM Shah Alam—during which he majored in printmaking. At the time, I was in the final leg of a 20-year sojourn as a lecturer-at-large, moving around and teaching at several Malaysian universities.

As an observer, I never once did question him, as to how he derived his art and whichever way it was headed. I preferred instead to watch his action and conduct for

I have always believed attitude plays an important role in an artist. Other matters, especially those that can be learnt and perfected by practice, are secondary compared to an artist's attitude towards his art.

While talent is a gift unrequested and bestowed at birth by the Creator, the artist has a choice in the mould of his attitude—it is this attitude that truly defines the artist. After all, why should we place too high a value on 'talent'? It comes free and many possess it in someway or other. To grow and hone such talent, on the other hand, often incurs a heavy cost—one that an artist pays with deep commitment and perseverance.

Faizal carries his Self like a half-filled cup. He goes about in humility, but holds his own confidently. His composure is that of a seeker of knowledge.

A Deep Respect for Nature

The truly environmentally respectful artist does not need to trump himself up as some eco-warrior. He does wear such emblems like a fashion label. For Faisal, his deep respect for nature comes naturally, rooted in his own life journey. It is quite normal for me to receive text messages from Faizal: "Mr. Jo, I am headed back to the village to help my father plant rubber saplings..." Living with Nature has been a lifelong experience for him.

Creating Art

In his work, Faisal processes his life experience with nature, his instinctive aesthetics and technical training. His work "Lebah" (The Bee) best typifies this.

While, the bee may be just a small creature, but it is a giant in terms of colony organisation and contribution to human civilisation.

Deftly handling the techniques of tracing and stencilling, Faisal has achieved a high degree of aesthetics in his work. It is hard to imagine how a small bee can be raised into a major piece of his solo exhibition. It is an insect that can be easily brushed off, but the knowledge one gathers from observing the bee is applicable to strategy and tactical planning. Faisal's labour resonates with his chosen subject accordingly, his work exuding a high degree of deft tracing and stencilling techniques.

Poetry

A small flower has such great beauty. What is more, the small buds can even transform itself into beneficial fruit. This manifestation is prevalent in Faisal's works. Perhaps, deep in his heart, he is amazed by how everything begins from small atoms and cells; yet Man derives immeasurable benefit from such sub-atomic and microscopic beginnings.

In his series titled "Growth", his expression takes on a more personal note. The zen-like quality of these two pieces makes them a work of tranquillity. Devoid of disturbances.

Has then the act of creating art been adopted as a personal ritual, or rather, has it become a painting of poetry? Such that is not meant to be heard, but rather for us to behold and experience...

Katakanlah, ‘Sesungguhnya solatku, ibadahku, hidupku dan matiku hanyalah untuk (menyembah) ALLAH TUHAN SEMESTA ALAM

– Surah Al An’am: 162

Menyatakan perihal tersebut, Faizal Suhif (Faizal) melihat alam sekitar melalui ‘kanta pembesar’ beliau pada karyanya dalam pameran solo kali ini, ‘Visual Poetry’. Perkaitan penyataan asasi mengenai manusia, alam dan Tuhan penting dalam menjelaskan hubung kait dalam kehidupan antara makhluk dan Pencipta. Alam semesta yang dilihat sama ada boleh disaksikan atau tidak, dipenuhi dengan ‘benda’ yang melengkapi alam semesta ini. Benda-benda tersebut terdiri dalam tiga bentuk.

Pertama, bentuk keras menjadikan ianya mengekalkan kedudukan dan bentuknya. Batu-batuannya contohnya dapat digunakan oleh manusia untuk mendirikan binaan kediaman. Bentuk kedua ialah cecair dengan keistimewaannya bolehkan ia mengikut bekas yang menakunginya dan ketiga, bentuk gas yang tersebar serta tidak setempat umpamanya udara. I Batu-batu sungai telah mencuit ilham Faizal dalam paparan karya berjudul ‘Dibawah Batu’ (2016). Susunan dan pengulangan bentuk dengan kepelbagaiannya tekanan jalinan pada imej menjelaskan penelitian observasi dalam rakaman data visualnya. Manakala ‘Hutan Batu’ (2017), dengan ‘ochre red’ paparan rekahan tanah liat dan batuan bertindanan menampakkan imej-imej potret dan bentuk binatang yang sengsara bersama kayu-kayu yang dipancang (seolah batu nisan) ke dalam tanah, menuju proses kepesatan pembangunan.

Observasi dan ‘wawancara’ Faizal merangkumi kehidupan manusia berinteraksi dengan persekitaran dan alam tabi’i. Habitat binatang-binatang dipersekutaran diamati secara serius dengan rakaman kematian ‘rakan alam’ beliau. Lakaran-lakaran kecil dari pengamatan beliau terhadap serangga-serangga, tumbuhan kecil seperti rumput, bunga lalang, ranting-ranting pokok yang mati, dan tanah jerlus dipindahkan ke kanvas dengan interpretasi yang dialami. Dalam memindahkan bentuk dan imej, Faizal menggayaikan dengan imej bukan realistik menjuruskan rasa tanda tanya dan kelihatan seakan-akan objek sebenar di dalam pemikiran penghayat. Kebanyakkan ‘hitam dan putih’ yang dinyatakan dalam karya merupakan satu simbol ‘perjanjian’ dalam kehidupan manusia dan Pencipta. Umpamanya menjalankan urusan pekerjaan seharusnya disertakan perjanjian bertulis antara kedua pihak bagi memastikan matlamat yang telah dipersetujui.

Keakraban Faizal pada alam semakin sebati dalam kehidupan harianya sehingga sekecil-kecil tumbuhan sekelilingnya diamati dengan teliti. Menurut Abdul Rahim dan Muhammad Alif, dahulunya pokok-pokok tinggi seperti cengal, keruing dan meranti menjadi sumber ekonomi bagi negara Malaysia dan Indonesia. Pokok gaharu mengeluarkan damar dan kapur manakala pokok tulang pula menjadi persinggahan lebah untuk membuat sarang yang menghasilkan madu asli.²

Telitinya Faizal dalam pemerhatian pada alam sekelilingnya ‘dikanta basarkan’ sehingga lahirnya karya ‘Ulat Dalam Batu’ (2017), bersaiz ukuran 152 x 610 sentimeter besar dan berekor dalam kedudukan vertikal. Keretakkan jalinan pada objek mendekatkan pemahaman bagi menjelaskan sifat ‘kebatuan’ pada ulat kecil dalam menjalani kehidupan dan ketentuan Pencipta untuknya.

Aktiviti tumbuhan dalam tanah turut diinterpretasikan dalam “Meliar” (2016), Faizal melingkarkan akar-akar yang berbelit namun berirama dalam melahirkan kuntum bunga pada dua panel yang tidak selari. Apakah dua panel itu gambaran platform dalam masyarakat dengan fahaman yang berbeza?

‘Visual Poetry’ membawa kita kepada pemahaman kehidupan yang kecil dalam masyarakat sesama makhluk dan alam. Setiapnya ada peranan dalam keberadaan dimuka bumi dan Faizal telah menyampaikan karya ‘ekologi’ dalam penyampaian rasa kasihnya pada alam dan ‘penghuni-penghuni’ kecil yang menemani kehijauan aura dirinya

VISUAL POETRY

The process of imitating Mother Nature, also known as "mimesis" can be traced back to the era of Paleolithic cave paintings of Lascaux in France. There are plenty of full-discourse analysis, debates and discussions by anthropologists and art historians alike on the underlying intention of portraying such imageries. While some suggest the paintings serve as a form of data or events recording means, others reason that the imageries were a form of artistic expression.

In case of the former, it could be justified by saying the said visuals serve a symbolic function which correlates with pre-development of a modern language and alphabetical writing system. That said, this may not be a case of "visual versus verbal" per se, rather a simple reminder of a coherent co-relation between one and the other. If and only if we are to agree to the latter notion, the cave paintings were portrayed rather interestingly as these were not the stereotypical depiction of a bull being hunted by men rendered in stick figures. The technical approach was less complex, inundated with simplified outlines that suggested the whole scenario in a single picture. That very style is known as Primitive Art; series of renderings done in simplistic form and contain very limited colour. Thus when talking about portraying images obtained from Nature, it is simply undeniable that men consciously or sub-consciously respond to Nature.

In this instant, The Artist takes it further by responding to his surroundings through his works. Faizal Suhif is a printmaker who chose to reside in the outskirts of Hulu Langat despite having daily errands to run in Kuala Lumpur. The landscape of his artistic sanctuary differs drastically from his peers who are mostly content creating and molding artworks in shop lots and lofts situated within various parts of the city. My journey to The Artist's studio took me from the grey, sharp edges of city skyscrapers and buildings to a greener pasture of flora and fauna.

In a bigger picture, the location and environment of his residence play a significant part in influencing, inspiring and as well as oozing off energy particularly to those who adhere to the philosophical system of feng shui. Well in this case, Faizal does not only "print" Nature but also breathes it. And his fascination does not stop there. For those who are new to The Artist, Faizal is not merely a visual researcher but also a young man who seeks pleasure in agricultural activities and land explorations. Perhaps it is the longing memory of his father's garden that he clenches near and dear to his heart that dragged him deeper into the wondrous of Nature. Anyway, I promised The Artist not to spare all the personal details about him here. You ought to get in touch with him personally. I am sure he appreciates it even more.

Visual Poetry, the title as was suggested by The Artist, encompasses his passion in organic landscape that he surrounds himself with and the interpretations of his readings through the experience of being one of the inhabitants of the eco-system. His body of work comprises of an orchestrated monoprint action that is derived from the rich surfaces that the Earth has to offer. The richness of that very mark-making quality is then controlled and composed by tracing technique to either fill the void or cancel out any clutter in his image. If the illustrious description on the Faizal's printmaking process does not intrigue you, allow me to elaborate more on its contents. Faizal's appreciation towards Nature and the depiction of it in his artwork does not appear to bear the qualities of being controversially protestant.

In fact, The Artist believes in capsulizing both the positive and negative responses and harmonizes them before implementing them in his art. He humbly learned that there is always a better way of taking care of the Earth, or as construed in Islamic teachings whereby men are the caliphs or caretakers of Mother Nature bearing a huge responsibility in regulating their natural habitat wisely from harm and danger.

Faizal treats his ability to express his thoughts creatively through art as a remembrance to the Higher Power of the Universe. His gratitude and acknowledgements entrenched within the Islamic teachings are visualized through divine concept of God and His magnificent creation. The recurring triangles are metaphorically pointing to the Greatness of God and the Qiblah; the direction that Muslims are supposed face during their prayers. The Artist was also inspired by the story of the Prophets of Islam and their respective eras. Nature to Faizal is no longer seeing them as a muse per se but also means to get in touch with his spiritual side through his faith in his religion. Tree roots are both depicted in 'Melia' and 'Tersirat', which is the attestation to the concept of faith and one's belief system.

Visual Poetry is a mixture of both Faizal's panoramic landscape and macro shots of subject matters derived from that very landscape. The act is akin to viewing through a microscopic lens to obtain a clearer, better view of any particular object. Perhaps the Artist is planting a subtle message to the audience not to be dismissive of any minute detail lest one risk losing the bigger picture altogether.

The objects that can be clearly seen in most of his artworks are a bee, a spider, ginger shoots, heliconia shoots and seeds all blown up to super scale prints with the intent of highlighting their presence and contribution to the cyclical nature of Nature itself. The Artist is preaching balance and harmony which can be seen in the bee and the spider supersized drawings. The bee which carries honey can be viewed as a positive matter while the spider which covers most of the household with its cobwebs is seen as negative, although a both serve their own purposes.

Faizal can always relate to his subjects. He feels like it is his personal job to share such awareness to others. The poetry that lies within the visual feels almost the same as any literary gems that comes in the form of stanzas, verses and rhymes. It is also noteworthy to state that Faizal tends to be manipulative in his narration through multiple perspectives of microcosm and macrocosm.

Faizal's method in his art making process is almost synonymous with subtle, earth-tone colours which are minimal to balance out the heavy-pressed black ink of marks. He usually lets nature takes its course after altering and adding a few suggestions of light and shadow to form his subject matter, leaving the rest just as it is. This would encourage the viewer to look beyond the dark hues rather than to focus on colourful renderings of a form. One would either stare for hours trying to make out of the subjects or meaning of his prints or walk away not noticing anything. Taking cues from the responses to his previous artworks, The Artist brings out the essence of his landscape through the enlargement of his subject matter this time around. Perhaps it is time to let some new faces in. Faizal's artworks are not that incomprehensible to begin with. But with a little patience and passion, one may be able to fathom the beauty lining such dark, macabre settings.

Visual Poetry preaches a better understanding of one's surroundings which in this case, Faizal and his creative nest in Hulu Langat. Self-discovery, soul searching, self-reflection, contemplation and meditation are the keywords that are best associated with Faizal's new development in art. The Artist hopes that the divine elements in the prints can be treated as a guideline for audiences alike as well as a reminder to The Artist himself. Philosophy and wisdom are derived from the guides of Nature. Only one that remains is whether we believe/notice it or not.
